

"How many people are you currently living with and what is their relationship to you?" "6 girlfriends"

what somebody's dad said: "If you're doing something, anything, even selling your soul to corporations for a quick buck - do it well."

This sounds... tedious. So how much can I make?

Survey-scalping is unpredictable. Different platforms offer different kinds of rewards, and it's usually better to stick with one, so as to concentrate all of your time on one platform, and even possibly receive benefits. Some might offer gift cards, some e-Wallet cash, some air miles. Figure out what your objective is, and proceed accordingly.

You can usually make a lot more money if you're unconcerned about privacy and intrusion. Some platforms allow you to install browser extensions on your computer, or apps on your phone, that track all of your internet activity. These actually pay pretty well - usually in dollars, upto $10 a month.

On most platforms, you will earn some kind of in-platform currency (think Monopoly money) that's worth some paltry conversion rate (100 Monopo-bucks to a Rupee). The scale difference, obviously, is to make you feel better about earning 100 of something rather than the Re. 1 that it's actually worth.

But what's the number you ask? Well, it isn't pretty. With sustained mindless clicking, you can expect to make a few hundred rupees every hour.
