

While the products that you sell may be determined based on multiple factors including your area of expertise, products that you are passionate about etc., it's always worthwhile to check out which categories of products find the most customers in the online space.

Here, based on statistics and popularity, we suggest a few categories that you could look into.

General categories

General categories refer to those products that are used by a mass. These products come with the advantage that a large number of customers are already scrolling online for these. Also, there are a large number of sellers catering to the consumers.

This scenario has its obvious flipside – the more the number of sellers, the harder it will be for you to stand out among the crowd and attract the customer's attention.

That said, there are potential subcategories in each segment that may not yet be taken over by a large number of sellers. These could be your entry points into the market.

Apparels

With half of its population under the age of 25, and around 41 percent under 20 years, it's perhaps not surprising that apparels form the biggest segment of products sold online in the subcontinent. About 35% of the total revenue from online sales in India comes from this segment.

This includes sales from both finished apparels and dress materials which could then be tailored to form finished products. You even have the choice to focus on one gender or type of population as your target audience since apparels for women and men, as well as children, all have takers.

Also, online apparel sales are pitted to grow four times by 2020.

Apparels – Because everyone loves to look good