Tablets, digital cameras, and laptops are worthy candidates for online sales. These would also make sense in the long-term perspective since it's estimated that India will become the fifth biggest consumer electronics market in the world by 2025.

Consumer electronics – Everyone wants the latest tech

Footwear

As suggested earlier, a young population means a large number of people with an overwhelming desire to try out new fashion. And some of the most innovative designs – be it functional or in a purely aesthetic front – are to be found in the footwear category.

From every day slippers to leather shoes and everything in between, the demand is high for footwear in the Indian market, and people are quite comfortable shopping online for them.

Video games

Though video games are globally a huge industry, the biggest chunk of games sales in India seems to happen in the kids' category. Mostly, parents buy games online for their children.

But that's not to say that game titles that appeal to an older audience aren't viable at all. You could have a mix of each category, with more stock in the kids' section.

Home furnishing

A spurt of growth is seen in the home furnishing category as India's $20 billion furniture business slowly yet steadily finds a home online.

The fact that this segment has been largely unregulated for long means that customers tend to rely on online sellers if they are reputable.

It's estimated that India's home furnishing market would cross ₹4,000 Crore by 2020.

Particular areas that you can focus on in this category, based on recent trends include kitchenware, home décor and furniture. Bedroom and dining room furnishing products are also seeing steady growth with a 6 to 7 percent yearly rise in demand.
