

Sell both domestically and globally with eBay

eBay

eBay is one of the best platforms to place your products for an international customer base. You could list your products on the company's Indian website. To make the products available across the world, you should open a separate eBay account on the site for the nation where you wish to sell. This comes recommended from eBay due to advantages like Paypal support and better currency support.

Amazon

Apart from an account on the Indian site for sales in the country, for international sales, say for US, you would require an Amazon account with the US site. A non-US resident has to undertake an online tax interview. You can also ship products globally through their Fulfillment by Amazon(FBA) scheme.

Flipkart

Flipkart is a great platform to reach a wide customer base. You could register as a seller by uploading certain documents like PAN card and bank account proof. Also available

India's answer to Amazon are the company's logistics service called Ekart, and, with a good track record, also their fulfilment service.

Shopclues

You get your own store with Shopclues. There is even the option to register a custom domain for your shop. (the default URL would be storename.shopclues.com, Custom domain name would be storename.com).

Paytm

Features like chatting with customers, offering variable pricing and even customized services are available on Paytm. Also, you only pay for products that you actually sell.
