

Amazon also helps sellers by offering extended warranty in addition to accidental and liquid damage protection for smartphones and laptops. If you don't want to worry about after-sales services, you simply need to sell on these e-commerce platforms. Some of the other third-party warranty providers are servify.in, b2x.com, onsitego.com, oneassist.in. Although the companies claim that they have access to genuine spare parts, buyers need to verify before handing over the device. Servify and B2x are authorized by OnePlus to repair their smartphones. With a robust e-commerce platform and access to warranty providers, sellers can concentrate on the sales.

Courier partners

If a buyer needs to return the smartphone, television or any item after delivery, the seller should simplify the entire process by establishing partnership with courier partners. While Ekart handles the logistics of Flipkart, Amazon have their own courier service under the name Amazon Transportation Services. If you are a direct seller, then you can partner with Xpressbees, which is exclusively oriented to service e-commerce companies. In case a customer initiates a return or replacement request, you can ask the courier to pick up the item. Buyers need not have to pack and ship the item on their own. If you arrange returns in this manner, it will help customers to a large extent.

Dealing with outdated products

If a buyer contacts you regarding the smartphone after five years of purchase, try not to discourage them by saying that nothing is possible. There are options available such as exchanging the old smartphone via Flipkart and Amazon for a brand-new handset. The only condition is that the phone should be in working condition. The exchange rate will be decided depending upon the age of the device. The amount will be deducted from the total value of the new smartphone. While Flipkart have limited options when it comes to devices, Amazon provides exchange for all old phones starting at ₹515. As a seller, you can't take any responsibility beyond 4 or 5 years of purchase and hence exchange is the only option left before a buyer. Moreover, if a manufacturer shuts down their business, then sellers should advise buyers to exchange their product since service centres won't be operational.

Conclusion

While buying products is easy, selling them is no easy task. E-commerce companies have definitely simplified the registration process for new sellers.
