

banks to better understand their customers and their financial dealings. The business enterprise can be commonly grouped under following heads:

- Sole Proprietorship
- Partnership Firm
- Company
- Trust
- Association of persons

To open a banking account, the first and foremost step across enterprises is to get an account opening form and fill the same. It will ask for personal details like name, permanent address, communication address, nomination details, source of income and what not. Some common documents required by the banks are:

- A proof of identity. (PAN Card, Driving License, Passport, Voter ID, Aadhar Card, Job Card etc. can be used)
- A proof of address (Driving License, Passport, Voter ID, Aadhar Card, Job Card, Utility Bill etc. can be used)
- Coloured photographs
- A proof of business establishment (Depends on type of business enterprise)
- Contact details with email ID

In addition to above, the Government of India has mandated the linking of all the bank accounts with Aadhaar by March 31, 2018. All the documents mentioned above can be self-attested.

Sole Proprietorship

Sole Proprietorship is a type of enterprise that is owned and run by one individual and in which there is no legal distinction between the owner and the business entity. Here the owner will generally hold a normal savings account and a current account. We have already discussed the difference between savings and current account and purpose of both. Opening a savings account is pretty simple as along with account opening one needs to just submit a self attested copy of identity proof, address proof and coloured photographs. It gets a bit complicated when it comes to current account. Along with the above mentioned documents, one needs to submit a self attested copy of Trade License to prove the existence of the establishment.

Partnership Firm

Partnership Firms in India are governed by the Indian Partnership Act, 1932. As per Section 4 of the Indian Partnership Act:-
