

Your path to entrepreneurship

You've obviously seen those ads for custom T-shirts, mugs and coasters on Facebook and other social media websites. Not all of them are run by big enterprises. Quite a few of these stores started right out of someone's home. The biggest ecommerce website in the world, Amazon, has its origins in Jeff Bezos' garage. Not just Amazon, but Apple, Hewlett-Packard, Google and many of today's top companies have had humble origins. So what's stopping you from starting your own business?

We're now living in an era of entrepreneurship where everyone with a fair bit of know-how can start his or her own business. We've covered how you can, with minimal investment, start making money from the convenience of your home. In this FastTrack, we're scaling up and going into all the details about starting your own selling business. Before you start dismissing this FastTrack because there's going to be a significant capital investment, let us assure you that we've taken the effort to ensure that both, low-investment and high-investment methods have been covered.

Since this seems oddly businessy for a Digit FastTrack, you might be wondering as to why are we even covering this topic. Well, being an entrepreneur has been greatly simplified thanks to the advent of technology and various ecommerce sites. It's not just the marketplace that's transformed, but even the process of starting your own business has been greatly streamlined and digitised by the Government. We've covered all of these aspects in this FastTrack.

You can certainly invest in a CMS that's built for deploying ecommerce websites within a couple of clicks but that incurs a massive investment not only in terms of building and maintaining a website but every aspect
