

3 vendors, 3 products, 1 customer. Why is this a problem? There's a small item on the invoice titled shipping costs. The customer will receive three different packages and maybe asked to pay shipping costs on all three separately. If you were the customer, would you be happy in that situation? If you waive the shipping costs, the vendors are still to be paid those costs and now they come out of your profits. Are you happy about that?

The buck stops here. You are the seller, the brand and the only name that the customer knows. If there is any issue – delayed delivery, wrong product, faulty or damaged goods, it's your tush on the line. You have to accept responsibility, take the blame, keep your head down and try to ensure that the customer remains happy at the end of the day. Even if it means taking a loss.

So now that you have the complete picture, it's time to weigh the two sides. Do you think it's still worth it? If yes, read on and let's get you started.

Get, Set, Sell.

Right suppliers

This is the first step. Yes, this is not a mistake, we are not under any Bachchanian influence. Under normal circumstances, one would start looking at what products are in demand, what would the customers like and then work backwards to find how to fulfil that need. But this is not the usual business. You are not the manufacturer or the wholesaler. You are completely dependent on a third-party. This third-party is the foundation and backbone of your entire business. Does it make sense that we first ensure the foundation is strong and reliable? So first and foremost, make a list of all the possible suppliers, meet them, if possible, have a word with their clients. In general, do whatever research you can on them. Remember, you are the face of the product. Any mistake on the vendor's part and it's your blood that will be called for. Be careful about this step.

There are several websites dedicated to offering drop shipping of products like baapstore.com, oberlo.in, udghatan.com, etc. Most Research about the several websites that you can use as your drop shipping vendors. You can even foreign based websites like Ali Express if you work out all the numbers correctly.