

your website. A simple way to ensure that your end user is willing to put their money in the pot is including a hassle free return policy. This gives the customer the ease to invest without thinking twice and could hike sales for you.

Hackers On The Prowl:

These bad boys are on the prowl at all times to find information that they can use to fund their needs. Your money in their pockets. And to make it worse, you could be responsible for hackers getting credit card information of your customers. If this were to happen, you will surely be out of business in a matter of weeks, if not days. An absolute necessity is Secure Socket Layer (SSL) technology which helps encrypt sensitive financial data that is being fed into your website to further be linked to the bank. Whatever web hosting provider you invest with needs to have the means to support SSL.

Credit card fraud is just the tip of the iceberg. When it comes to hackers, there is so much more that could go wrong with your website. Other than stealing your customer's money, they could be stealing money from your business. Or even worse, they could be planning a 'denial of service' attack on your company. When this happens, you as an admin, are denied the rights to log in to your own website. This could be disastrous for your business. When orchestrated correctly by the hackers Inc, you could suffer a blow that even the most successful businesses may never fully recover from.

If you were to ever have such an attack on your finances, it would immediately mean loss of faith amongst customers. Customers will be less likely to put their information down on a website that is prone to attacks. And that, for you, could be the beginning of the end. Invest in good security software to avoid such situations and secure all data. All of these security solutions may not be absolutely foolproof, but they do reduce the risk by a very high percentage. Bottomline, they will let you sleep soundly at night.

Go Back To Sleep:

Remember those dreams we spoke about in the beginning? Perhaps if you keep these pitfalls and common errors in mind before setting out on your online retail journey, you will see serious success. The kind that will let you have years and years of good sleep and ensure that you begin making money while you are sleeping. Now THAT would be a dream come true, wouldn't it?
