

While setting up a home business may seem like an easy task, thanks to our edition of Fast Track, there is a lot of work that goes into ensuring that your home business is a booming success. A lot of home businesses start everyday, but very few of them reach the pinnacle of success. This is mainly because most of these new business owners fail to set aside a fixed amount of time (and sometimes money) to advertise their business. If you do not advertise, how will your customer find you?

The biggest misconception about advertising home businesses online is that everything comes at a fee. It's true that everything that needs professional help will come at a fee, but there are a zillion ways to get the job done yourself, at no extra cost. It requires a little homework, bucket loads of patience and a keen eye on results. Stick by these rules and you might see the moolah rolling in faster than you can count it.

Searching for you:

Search Engine Optimization or SEO is an oft-used term that most business owners do not understand or have never bothered to acquaint themselves with. Big, big mistake. SEO is your friend. It helps your ranking on search engines. And without search engines where would you be, eh? Think, how many times do you directly go to a site for research without searching for it on Google? SEO relies on keywords to ensure that the data on your website is caught by the search engines and your site shows up higher on the results metrics. The higher your ranking, the more the eyeballs. Let's face it, how many of us actually hit the page 2 on search engine results. Aim for page 1 and that's half the battle won. You don't need to be a tech geek to figure this one out. There are a gazillion free SEO tools out there that will help make the job easier. You can find keywords that are integral to your industry and ensure that they show up in the leader of your website. This would up your chances of being seen higher in search results.

Social butterflies:

Social media is the way to go these days and it is anything but difficult to get a hang of. Once you have mastered the ropes of social media, you can use it to advertise your products or services at no extra costs, thank you very much! If you are the kind of person with a large social network already in place, the task at hand is much simpler. Getting people to like your page or follow your Instagram account is the tough part. From there on, all you
