

a leading sitcom. But let us remind you - you already knew 'The Secret'. Only thing being, it was called the 'Law of Attraction' before it became a book titled 'The Secret'. So what did Rhonda Byrne, author of the book, do differently - the packaging. And suddenly everyone wanted a piece of the pie, because everyone wants the experience. Focus on your business' USP. Tell people what makes your product worth their while instead of focusing on how amazing your product is. Tell customers how the product will make their life better. Solving a problem and giving a value add to their life will sell your product more than just touting its features .

Go local before global:

Advertising for your business locally may seem like the most obvious thing to do. But you will be surprised to know that it is a step that many home businesses omit altogether for reasons best known to them. While your business may not necessarily be local in nature, it does make sense to advertise locally. Let us tell you why. For example, website selling customised home decor based in Mumbai, advertising in local lists for Mumbai based directories makes sense. If a person were to type 'home decor Mumbai' in a search engine, they will be more likely to see your business listed there. And they will be more keen on procuring from someone local. We humans like to be in our comfort zone and stick to familiarity. A customer will be more comfortable in dealing with a vendor from the same area or city. Also, there is the matter of proximity which translates into easier follow up, quicker delivery times etc. You should preferably choose to be present on free listing services app like Google Places, Yahoo! Places etc. These can help your business much more than you can imagine. Plus, they let you attach photos of your products. Additionally, they also have the provision to let patrons review your product. And this can help people sort businesses out basis their user reviews too. Interesting, eh!

Advertising online:

This sounds like a given, doesn't it? Especially when the title of the chapter has a lot to do with advertising your home business. But there is quite a few ways to advertise online. While we have briefly suggested using social media to advertise, you could consider a few other mediums. Google AdWords for one, is a very popular method of advertising in the online space. You could opt for a pay per click model which means you will only pay when people meaningfully interact with your ad. Investing in online advertising
