

Sears

Sears, a notable retail organisation, has been around since the 1800s when it began as a mail-order catalogue company. A considerable measure has changed from that point forward, including its development and decay as a mail-order catalogue company, and retail establishment, the dispatch of Sears.com, and a merger with Kmart in 2005. The Sears site as of now gets about 26.1 million visits for every month.

The super specific stores

These are the stores that cater to a niche specific to a particular type of product and market. You've probably seen or heard of most of them but probably wouldn't know about what makes them so unique.

Koovs

Koovs calls itself a one-stop online destination for all things fashion. As one of the best contenders in the fashion speciality, the online store releases over 150 new items consistently so customers can discover something new every time they sign in.

The best offering brands accessible on this platform include New Look, KOOVS, J.D.Y, Spring Break, Forever New and a few others.

Other than offering an extensive rundown of their lineup of products, Koovs knows how to angle new clients. Every single paid purchase gets a 5% rebate, and in the event that you post an image of yourself on Instagram wearing your new purchase from Koovs and tag them (utilising a unique code), you may even get featured on their site. Cashless instalments are available and should you get a damaged or wrong product, returning is free and simple.
