An annual review of what to buy

If like the rest of buyers online you're having a hard time figuring out what to buy based on the date on the calendar then don't be so confused. Scoring a great piece for a ridiculously affordable price also make you feel weirdly victorious, doesn't it?

During January, you will see the aftermath of sales that took place in December for Christmas and New Year. This isn't usually the focus of Indian ecommerce companies, since they focus more on the shopping season that precedes Diwali. However, stock clearances from the winter lot can lead to better prices. Pro-tip - this will probably be your last chance to buy air conditioners at their cheapest.

Most would argue that February would be the best time to start checking up for jewellery items as the month is marked with several holidays for the compassionate and familial. Whether or not you have a special someone for you on Valentine's Day, you can still avail several jewellery promotions pegged to the holiday.

Coming To March, luggage items should be the priority as during this time a lot of colleges and schools across the country are looking to start new sessions. You're likely to find suitcases on sale, making it a great time to snag a new carry-on or other types of bags.

The April-May period in the country is good for looking at summer items. This is usually when new collections roll in for apparel stores - the same are usually put on lower prices a towards the end of the season. The peak of the summer also results in high prices for electronics like air conditioners.

Also, due to impending arrival of beach season, you'll find fitness gear at great discounts with people joining gyms in droves to sport the perfect beach body and companies taking advantage of this trend.

Then coming to July/August, in India this is when monsoon is at its peak. So if you haven't bought your raincoats and umbrellas yet, now is not a good time. By the same logic, this also turns out to be the best time to cash in on end of season sales on summer stuff.
