

is one such reference formula. You can use “=COUNTA(B1: B5)” to find the number of times data is being mentioned.

You can also use COUNTBLANK to understand how many blank spaces are there on the sheet. This is also essential when trying to conduct QC tests that need to find the gaps in the information, as it allows you to plan better and figure out what you require for the next steps. When mapping out the organisational chart, you can also plan out how many engineers or testers are needed for a project. You can set up a simple COUNT mechanism to calculate your needs before launch.
