

Charts

The point of having extensive research and analysis is to demonstrate findings visually. Visual representations of data are much more effective in reports and presentations.

Excel users have been using data efficiently throughout various challenges in the domain. However, the greatest challenge is to showcase that data in a visually appealing fashion. Charts are a great way to show data in a more digestible and tangible format. You can also share that diagram or chart with another analyst or member of the team. This makes the whole process a collaborative one, and a unique approach to Excel dominance. It also brings that data to an audience that may not be able to understand it in the raw form.