

Research conducted by individual enthusiasts shows that Twitter yields 40% more ROI than any other social media platform.

According to studies, marketers get a return of $2.70 on each advertisement that they had spent only a dollar on. Every day, more and more marketing giants are spending billions on Twitter commercials. This simple statistic is enough to give everyone an idea about the amount of money that these can generate. Twitter, thus, takes the concept of branding to a different level.

A strategy that works well on Twitter is the use of videos. People love videos, especially the ones that they can relate to. Given the huge mass on Twitter, social media strategists and the creative cell of companies come up with new methods to entice audiences. The Twitter algorithm works efficiently in locating the target audience, thus bringing to people only what they like more, while increasing the revenue generation of the brand or the company responsible for floating the video.

Due to all these factors, companies are engaging in investing more and more money on Twitter. Studies have found that more investment on Twitter yields more returns. This is revolutionary as it has changed the entire outlook of the world with respect to investments, risks and returns. On Twitter, the risk of losing money is minimum while the return increases exponentially with the increase in investment.
