

These are largely used by the population on social media to attract people of the same nature or likings. These hashtags are nothing but keywords to search for something in particular.

With the online world becoming bigger and more closely knit, the trends and topics of discussion are changing constantly. While some are topics that are discussed locally and are restricted to a particular region, state or country, there are other more important topics that can take the world by storm. These topics can be referred to as 'viral content'. This content could be anything, from global warming to a historical event taking place somewhere in the world. Owing to social media, this content spreads like wildfire. The thing that spreads these news are the hashtags and keywords. If a user wants to know about something in particular, he or she can simply look up that particular hashtag and go through all the articles, links or handles that pop up in front of him or her. Hashtags and keywords are, thus, effective and efficient tools in transmitting information around the world.

For example, if a person is looking for companies selling smartphones, chances are, he or she will look up #smartphone or #bestsmartphones. Both of these are the keywords that you must incorporate if you deal with smartphones. Say, you have a blog and you write about smartphones. In order to bring in more people to read your articles, you can incorporate the most used hashtags related to the topic, in your bio. When someone comes looking for these hashtags or keywords, they will be redirected to your profile. Hence, your traffic will increase.

Smart usage of hashtags is key to utilising what Twitter has to offer

Twitter Audience Manager

The Twitter Audience Manager is simply a tool that helps a person or a company with a Twitter Ad account review the audience that gets to see the commercials. This powerful tool also helps one manage the audience