

out a lot, you will see similar advertisements in your news feed. However, your friend might be looking up pets and pet products on Twitter and he or she will be shown ads of similar nature. Twitter shows promoted content under a 'Promoted Icon'. These can be Promoted Tweets, Promoted Trends or Promoted Accounts.

Often, these advertisements are driven by the social situation in a region. Companies with a broader customer base also talk to other important social issues based on what their clients and the users across the platform are currently showing interest in. They talk of the conditions around the planet, while promoting their services or products to people. If their content is good enough, it also goes on to become viral all over the internet. For example, the massacres at Sudan gained positive momentum when the plight of the refugees became known to the world. Most of it was done by the social media platform with the help of hashtags and keywords.

When you interact with these commercials on Twitter or show interest in something, Twitter takes note. They might then customise or personalise
