

Keep track of what's trending around the world and create content around it

Analytics - How to interpret and make changes to content with examples

The content you generate depends largely on the kind of people you wish to target. In fact, it depends on many factors. However, if you are a part of the audience, you have the power to turn off the advertisements that companies throw at you. Making some changes in your Privacy Settings will solve that issue. Twitter never shares your personal information with companies. However, they do share information necessary to show you the pages that have the kind of content you like. They do not stop tracking your movements across the internet after you have logged out of Twitter. To be able to do that, you need to change your settings. Twitter keeps a track of the kind of content that you like on the internet, not simply on Twitter.

For example, you are subscribed to newsletters from blogs dealing with gadgets. Twitter will then show you advertisements or promoted content of the pages and companies that deal with technology related products or services.
