

LinkedIn is the best choice to find the right employees. LinkedIn allows users to export their connections, which other platforms do not offer. Exporting connections, in turn, helps the users to build their own database, which is the powerful asset for the business. LinkedIn data belongs to the user, and this data, such as articles, connections, invitations, and contacts, can be downloaded and archived anytime by the user. Moreover, LinkedIn is the excellent platform for public relations. You can easily connect with thousands of publishers, journalists, and media professionals by making the right introduction.

Your LinkedIn profile

Signing up to LinkedIn is absolutely free. After signing up, you need to create your profile. In LinkedIn, you can edit your public profile, edit visibility, generate public profile badge, and much more. Your profile has the introduction card that contains the contact info section, which displays your contact and personal information. This section also contains your email address by default, contact number, website URL, your birthday, the direct link to your LinkedIn address, and more. You can make some information visible to the public, while some information will be visible to your connections only.
