

So how does TikTok tick on through time? The story goes that a company by the name of ByteDance developed Douyin in 2016. It simultaneously launched TikTok for the rest of the world in 2017. The snazzy app clung on almost immediately with the masses and before you knew it, millions of users were hooked in a really short time.

For users who were so far fascinated by YouTube, TikTok leapt on with popular hashtags and creators. A hit with teenagers and young adults alike; specifically between 14 – 24 years; you'll find a lot of teenagers recording themselves dancing to popular songs. With its easy to use edit feature; videos are often edited to uproarious peals of laughter. Interestingly, a lot of reports state that over 500 million people regularly use the app with newer trends and videos are being uploaded almost daily. Starting off with gaming and comedy; it has tickled more than a single funny bone since its launch. Since it has its pulse on what is appreciated and liked; it's become increasingly popular.

Why should you pick TikTok

Videos and ads are sold here; giving a break to an uncalled momentum. TikTok so far has not yet compensated its users for running ads on their pictures. Besides there are no set rates for ads or brands to influence viewers. The brands and influencers get paid well if they get more hits on the video. Thus companies prefer to make a video regarding their product. The deed once done promotes the brand and the funnier its version; the better its outreach.

Simply put, companies, brands or influencers, as they are now called, get paid more if they engage with TikTok for long. The resultant high number of followers adds to their kitty too. Companies have thus made up their minds to create videos of their products with no preconceived value attached to it. The formula works simply; the more the followers the more money made! While the flight towards ads is on; so far, there's nothing confirmed.

Audience profile

An important question is thus tweaked; why do people follow you or want to follow you? What in the name of brands, screen space or entertainment do you offer that others don't? More or less, it's often entertainment. Intelligence, variety and brand building come in much later! So in case you
