

As compared to Twitter and Facebook, Snapchat is much more personal. The former might show you things that aren't really important to you. For instance, take their advertisements. You are scrolling through your feed and suddenly an irrelevant ad shows up. You read about people you don't even wish to know about. You get the drift. Snapchat on the other hand, only shows you only what you wish to see, and even that disappears immediately, no clutter. There's no denying that Snapchat is a completely different platform. Surely, there is a lot of data including pictures, videos, and stories. But that is from the people you follow. You follow a friend from college, you'll see his updates. Not some random pictures.

Snapchat has also proved to be very significant for businesses and brands that are interested in creating content solely meant for users.

Users watch over 10 billion videos on a daily basis on Snapchat. Wouldn't it be great if you could get your business, ads, photos, or videos on the platform to make use of those numbers? Let's take a look at how Snapchat can benefit a business –

1. Commitment with Geofilters – Snapchat gives you 'on-demand geofilters'. You know Snapchat is famous for its filters. The geofilter allows you to make use of a custom filter on your photo. These filters are pretty easy to use. Click a photo and then choose the best from the various filters presented by the app. Once you've selected your desired filter, you can send it to your friends, make it your story, save it for later, or do whatever you wish to do. These geofilters are not pricey at all. That's the best thing. Snapchat offers you to analyze your filter, this way you know how many people have seen and used your filter.

2. Increasing your social media presence – For a business to work, it needs to be socially available all the time. Snapchat has over 100 million active users, making it one of the most used platforms. The majority of the demographic on Snapchat are millennials. If your target audience falls between the age of 12-24, you can increase your online presence by using Snapchat and you can reach your target audience in no time.

3. Brand awareness – Creating a Snapchat account is as easy as creating a Twitter account. But using it on a daily basis is a necessary thing to do. You need to promote your product on a regular basis and stay connected with your target audience. You need to make your audience realize the importance of your brand. If your audience is large, your business will gain popularity and it will flourish. There are brands that have flourished on Snapchat using advertisements in the ten-second video format.
