

like Ticket Booking cannot be utilized on the platform. It is often seen that local businesses are still able to function and sell products to their known customers and clients via WhatsApp; it is still not clear how exactly it works for big companies who have to work intensely for their marketing and still risk being blocked by their target audience for “bothering them with too many messages”.

So as it seems, it can be said that selling stuff to your known contacts won't be a problem as such because you can always strike up a personal conversation and go out of your way to convince them to buy your products through mutual understanding. However, it really becomes difficult when you are a new company looking to tap into a new customer base.

Though you can always start working on your PR and customer satisfaction by attending to clients and potential clients through WhatsApp and, in some cases, market your products and offers a bit, but if you are a big business that doesn't have a human relationship with the potential customer, it really becomes difficult to market.

You need to keep in mind that you can be blocked anytime if the person feels too bothered by your redundant messages, so this way it is really a limited spectrum of goods and services that can be marketed and sold through WhatsApp.

The future of selling products on WhatsApp

Well, it might be true that currently selling products and services through marketing on WhatsApp doesn't seem to be a great hit, but it could all change with the upcoming changes planned for 2020. When the new update containing a feature for advertisements in people's stories comes out, WhatsApp is deemed to change forever. This update will mean that you'll be able to market your products and services just as you can currently do on Instagram and Facebook while
