

This article talks about how the younger generation is increasingly choosing social media platforms like Instagram and Snapchat for their leisure. While Facebook is one of the earliest known social media platforms, there has been a marked increase in the inclination of the young crowd towards other platforms like Snapchat and Instagram. In this article, experts comment over and give the reason behind this changing mindset.

The vernacular audience is on TikTok

“Vernacular videos have no real ad market as most of the viewers are wallet thin, and the other potential revenue models are yet to truly emerge in India,” as told by Sajith Pai, part of the team handling investment at Blume Ventures. Source: Live Mint.

This article gives an insight into the business domains of applications like Tik Tok. The increase in the vernacular audience on this platform has been notable. People have found expression on these platforms that common and popular social media sites like Facebook and Instagram could not give them. Not only have users found an opportunity to be themselves on social media through their own languages, but they have also found acceptance here. This article explores the strategies that companies have behind developing a platform such as this.

Facebook is more centered around groups now

“Facebook executives dropped the privacy word again and again at the recently concluded F8 2019. But it seemed only talk because Facebook showed nothing substantial showing that it was willing to walk the privacy talk.” - India Today.

Facebook has repeatedly stressed the importance of privacy time and again. By Facebook, we really mean Mark Zuckerberg, the founder of this social media platform. We just made the distinction because Facebook has actually failed to implement this strategy that its founder had put forth, at least in his talks. On the contrary, they have continued to become more centered around groups, thus causing the loss of privacy in a great manner. This particular article by a leading news portal, India Today, talks about this discrepancy and tries to explain what might actually be the scenario behind the curtains.
