

is the ideal place to start. But unfortunately, just because Facebook is a great platform for advertising doesn't mean all brands use it effectively. Many end up wasting money and throwing resources down the drain, because they have no strategy or don't understand how to use it. Hopefully that's not you. All it takes to succeed is a little knowledge of how Facebook advertising works and what some of the best practices are.”- Entrepreneur

<https://dgit.in/SMM11>

Twitter

Twitter Audience Manager

“The Audience manager is a tool in your Twitter Ads account for you to review and manage your audiences, you can access it by going to Tools* < Audience manager.”- Twitter

<https://dgit.in/SMM12>

Twitter ads

“Twitter is a great marketing channel for driving traffic and generating leads. In fact, 63% of Twitter users follow small businesses -- it's no wonder that companies can see actual growth from this platform.”- Blog. Hubspot

<https://dgit.in/SMM13>

YouTube

Understanding where to place ads

“If your video meets our advertiser-friendly content guidelines, you can turn on ads. If you're not sure your video is eligible, you can self-rate your content. Choosing to turn on ads doesn't mean that ads will automatically appear on a video. Before any ads appear, the video will go through a standard process including automated or human reviews to see if it meets our guidelines.”- Google

<https://dgit.in/SMM14>

Ethics of the platform

“While YouTube employees often browse user videos, there are too many uploads -- more than 65,000 per day -- for staff members to view every one to make sure it meets community guidelines.”- How Stuff Works

<https://dgit.in/SMM15>