

Stormbound can be seen as a mix of the tile-based strategy games and the conventional deck-building games. It is a blend of a board game and tower defence. The game has its unique pace at which the proceedings occur and it has a lot of scope for tactical play. It is a turn-based game between two opponents who have their units placed in the decks. The one who succeeds in destroying the deck of the opponent wins the game.

Tactical intelligence is necessary to win the battle and you cannot rely merely on the firepower. The game is surely a fast-paced battle but you have to see it through the end as there won't be any timer.

The game is easier to play and won't give you a chance to realise that you have spent hours playing it. Since a player cannot transfer mana from one turn to another, everyone is naturally encouraged to spend all that one has and this is how the game gets its intense pace.

The Elder Scrolls: Legends

The Elder Scrolls is another free card game which is set in the Elder Scrolls Universe. This game is a treat to gamers who enjoy story-based setups and strategy making. Elder Scroll takes deck building to another level and the scenic beauty is unparalleled. The visual and audio aspects of the game such as the voiceovers and the cutscenes of the characters that you choose to play make the perfect aura and setting of a fantasy world making it satisfying and addictive to every game lover.

Certain features of the game have gained a bit of unpopularity with players. It is way too common that the cards that are less powerful come
