

Gaming on the go

While casual and hyper-casual mobile video games still rule the roost, mobile video games have come a long way in 2019. We've seen a tremendous influx of games built to cater to the more serious type of gamers, or if we are to use the proper lingo, the hardcore gamers. Auto battlers and MOBA games have become quite popular over the past two years and these are known to require tiered strategic planning and quick responses in the later stages. Even the bigwigs such as Riot, Blizzard, EA and Tencent have shifted a good portion of their resources towards developing games and then to further foster the community around these games by means of virtual and physical events. Most of you reading this should already be aware of PUBG Mobile being the game with the highest esports prize pool in the country at the moment. India didn't exactly leapfrog over PC and console esports phenomenon but you'd be forgiven if you thought along those lines. For the common man in India, esports only became apparent after the mobile tournaments started taking place.

We decided that this would be the best time to shortlist some of the best games across several of the most popular genres on the mobile platform, be it iOS or Android. If you're in the habit of regularly downloading new games from the Play Store or App Store to try out, then you might recognise most of these games. However, we've taken the liberty of slipping in a few of the lesser-known but equally entertaining games that you ought to try out.
