

Some TikTok stars are TV stars such as the dancers who feature on dance shows on TV. It is the same dancing star who has now started a dancing channel on TikTok who has 8.2 million subscribers. She also plays a lead role in a daily soap, artists like herself join the app to see how many real-life followers they have and whether they still sell in the market.

Why should you advertise on TikTok is because all the traffic of Vine and SnapChat is now on TikTok? For those who know how to milk any situation in their favour, TikTok is not that tough to understand, after all, if you are someone with some expertise in using these social networking platforms.

Hype beasts

Coming back to the real experts and 'hype beasts' of TikTok, let us start with the adage that all ads make us sceptical now because there are just so many ads.

We are all tired of seeing ads pop up when we are trying to browse, but you can bet that a TikTok advertisement would be of a different kind. These are raw and unedited ads, and are hence more bearable than any other online ad, not counting TV ads because they are a different league.

If the TikTok ad formats started coming on landing pages, then it would mean magnetic business for the advertiser that TikTok partners with. A TikTok advertisement is like attracting all of the school and college goers in one go.

This phenomenon occurs because just about every kid that age is on TikTok. The ads can popularise your marathon brand, sports equipment sales, or any other beneficial avenue that you find lucrative.

If you think that marketing on TikTok does not do well, then look at the #in denim campaign that became a rage on the portal. Everybody should know that a TikTok campaign started the ad for jeans brand name GUESS.

From shabby dressing to best dressed, this campaign ran successfully on TikTok, and millions of people went out to buy jeans that they could afford, and many quoted saying that their favourite jeans brand

