

and those jazzy visual effects. Like a magician who pulls out a rabbit from his hat, TikTok has hooked Gen Z (all less than 35 years). So let's see what makes TikTok tick and how to talk with TikTok.

The most downloaded app in the iOS App store in five quarters consecutively from January 2018 to March 2019, TikTok is high on creativity but low on loyalty. The content is fresh and vibrant. Engaging about 500 million monthly users screams challenging but not that daunting. Taking online creating and sharing to a whole new level and being addictive all the time are the unique propositions of this app. But the question is, how should you hook your audience on an entertaining platform like TikTok?

Engaging TikTok users

Here are seven ways to engage the users on this easy to use the app:

1. Understand the structure – In a place where anyone can be a content provider thanks to the simplicity of this app, TikTok users thrive on participating in challenges (of a dance, music or food eating, etc.) and posting their clips as well. So, use hashtags (like you use on other social media platforms), throw in a blend of humour and music and forget conventional content while on challenges and contests. Challenges and hashtags go a long way in making the content popular among the youthful users. The idea is to make the users sit up, take notice and do it themselves instead of just watching. This takes experiencing the brand to another level where fun is the motto. Also, make the challenges a bit difficult and flexible.

2. Consider the #tumbleweedchallenge by Jimmy Fallon where the TV show host rolled like a tumbleweed and urged the users to post videos of them rolling likewise. Before you dismiss this as something silly, consider the success ratio. The Challenge gathered over 8,000 entries and 10.4 million engagements within a week. Fallon also started the #sharpiechallenge whereby the users had to flip a Sharpie marker and catch it with the same hand. The user then had to uncap it and draw a moustache on his face as fast as possible.