

5. The users can not only watch and create videos in-app but also add, remix and save songs and even live stream. This creative liberty allows users to add a fun element to videos without tiring themselves out or doling out oodles of money which was missing in the other popular apps. Ease of usage wins hands down in this app.
6. Freedom to express – On average, the users spend 52 minutes daily on TikTok. They try to pack in a punch within 15 seconds, use filters and editing tools, add effects, put in music always and lots more.

7. For example, Falco Punch and Selina Mour were roped in by Samsung for its #GalaxyA smartphone's launch in Germany. This Challenge used one of the salient effects (transition effect) of the app and correlated it with the phone's features. The users were asked to draw the letter "A" on their palms and "teleport" it to the hand of another user by using the transition effect. The video editing feature of the app allows one to apply filters, time effects, split the screen, transition and use stickers, emojis and GIFs etc. Samsung used one of the video editing features to its advantage. The message of the brand was that the phone connects you with your friends, and the brand personality was successfully lapped up by the users. So, if there is creativity, there is freedom to be creative too provided one understands how to use it.
