

municates the type of content you would love to share. To increase reach, try to keep all your profile names across various social media platforms the same. It will increase visibility and will rake in more followers.

Do remember that this world can be a cruel place. Leaking out too much about yourself can lead to others misusing the information to their gains. Be careful of how much you let out and always hide what is sensitive. I had once mentioned my place of articleship in my bio which led to some worrisome consequences. It's good to be open, but we must know where to insert the full stop for our safety.

Expanding your TikTok account

Have you heard of synergy benefits? If yes, that is exactly what we will discuss at this point. TikTok, or Musical.ly, is hardly two years old, and other platforms are much older and have a broader fan base. TikTok is raging and growing exponentially, and you would be best served if you can tap its energy in conjunction with other platforms.

Say, you upload a video on Instagram, which is a compilation of your most viewed TikTok skits. Or you upload a video that is relatively older to make your newer users visit it. It will help you in getting more views and also give you a chance to get the same user to subscribe to you on multiple platforms.

Learn what your audience wants

Everything sells, but you must know how to sell it. Before trying to earn on TikTok, you must know the reason why you have created the TikTok profile. Not everyone can be an all-rounder; most of us have some specific qualities.

It is essential to understand what those abilities are and utilise them to the fullest. Find out ways to grab audiences' attention who are looking for a particular kind of content. Do not go on a rampage and create content that is as diverse as India's weather.

You must follow a particular niche and understand what your target audience is expecting from you. Owning your niche and dominating the space can be infinitely beneficial.