

Promote your TikTok videos on other platforms

Promotion is an integral part of gaining traction. If you look around, there are several who deserve much more attention than they get. The best example is Sony's mobile division; they are the pioneers of so many important innovations. But their numbers are paltry when it comes to sales. The primary reason is the lack of marketing and promotion. Not many other than the die-hard fans know that a Sony Phone is getting launched.

So how do we promote?

We can use other similar platforms like Facebook, YouTube, Instagram, or others to let people know that you exist and that a new video is up. You can also send these videos to groups on WhatsApp or Telegram and ask your acquaintances, friends and family to share them.

Make the most of what you own

The format of TikTok is such that any commoner with a basic smartphone can make content for it. What it means that you don't need expensive gear worth thousands of dollars to be a TikTok star.

You need a brain to be able to eke out the most you have. If you are serious about it, we will suggest you get a gimbal as an added accessory, and you are good to go.

Many people assume that big expensive gears will make them overnight stars. If you are one of those, you can try doing so at your own risk. We will suggest otherwise, though. You can use the most rudimentary accessories to create content, and chances are, it will be appreciated if you follow most of what we've spoken about in the previous chapters. It is content that matters, not the accessories that you own.

Interact with your followers regularly

One-sided communication can feel incomplete. On TikTok, try to communicate
