

enthusiasts will be interested in buying a Steelseries product. So if your video is about basketball and you add a link to a Steelseries mouse, it is needless to say that your effort will be futile.

Live stream on TikTok to make money

TikTok also lets you live stream videos. Other platforms like YouTube, Instagram also allow people to go live and stream whatever they want. Those watching the live stream have the option to send you tip money, which will help you generate some much-needed revenue.

How does this work? It operates on a coin basis. It lets users buy virtual coins by paying money, which can then be used to gift their favourite TikTokers. The feature is free to use and helps the creators to earn money with a relatively lower number of fan following.

Who can use this? Anyone can, but you need to give the users a reason to come and watch you live. Say that you can sing or you want to lip-sync. Or you want to read out poetry you have written the previous night. On YouTube, creators also live stream themselves playing games, but that is not relevant here, given the essence of the app is in short videos.

TikTok gives the creators 80% of the money donated by the fans, and cuts 20%, which is not too bad. A live stream is a great way to let the world know that you exist, especially the brands which are your potential sponsors. The only downside is, it will be challenging to convert the money generated via this medium to hard cash. You will have to be satisfied with virtual gift cards and other coupons while trying to redeem it.