

Tok also has major social influencers who have been influencing the lives of content consumers since the Dubsmash days. The app itself is influential since it has garnered over 1 billion downloads across the globe. Using influencers can actually be a powerful brand marketing strategy.

Influencing the less influenced

A huge number of followers are influenced by social media platforms ads, pop up ads and search engine ads. A few that are less influenced by ads can be subconsciously introduced to the product using Tik Tok. Using talented individuals on TikTok products can be sold and the influencers themselves become a brand. They gain near-celebrity statuses and the limelight they desire if they work hard or merely have sheer talent. On example is singer Ranu Mondal, who was found singing in a railway station platform and gained celebrity status after the video goes viral. People started watching Ranu Mondal closely and subconsciously she has influenced so many individuals.

The art of influencing the less influenced is possible with Tik Tok marketing. Besides the fact that it brings out the many talented individuals around the globe, it also has a huge impact on major brands.

Simply put, a selfie in front of the mirror will create a brand value for the mobile phone used for the selfie. Therefore, the products cleverly and subtly inducted into funny and viral TikTok videos immediately gain added brand value and potential customers.

Creating Brand Value

Studies have proven that social media is influencing 67% of lives on Earth. Social media influences are major players in creating a brand value. Influ-
