

encer marketing through content has increased to 325%, according to Google. A huge amount is being invested in the influencer marketing. Brands want to be connected to influencers in their domain to gain more visibility and cred. This high demand led to the development of a whole industry, whereby intermediary agencies emerged left and right as matchmakers between companies and their desired influencers.

Simply if Jane puts a status as Coffee at Illy, starting a day with the best coffee. John checks the status before starting to work, on the way, if he sees an Illy coffee shop there is a 91% chance he is reminded about the brand and 78% chance he might actually get a coffee at the store.

These influencers can have both positive and negative impact. One small negative comment could also negatively impact a business or brand. For example, Jane has a bad morning and she did not like the coffee. She posts a status as the worst coffee at Illy, John sees the status and on the way to his office. He crosses the store and the coffee place misses a potential customer.

But do not fear—given all the challenges, social services remain a powerful way to maximize your effect if you take the right steps.

So, to sum up this introduction, influencers are people who post their experiences on social media like, dislike and comment through which they gain more followers. Using them for the promotion of your brand will possibly add more value to your brand. You could have a chance of generating 73% more customers daily, according to statistics.
