

excellent on Instagram and YouTube. However, this may not always be true, so make sure you do your research well and do not extensively rely on the popularity of an influencer on one site alone.

It may be the case that they are popular on Instagram, but have a poor following on TikTok since they do not resonate with the short video format, so be mindful about that.

Steps in creating an influencer campaign that improves your sales leads

1. Know your goals – Take into account your target for the campaign your brand aims at driving UGC or motivating users to access your application? Take into consideration the results and know what KPIs to measure the success of the project. You will calculate the ROI of your initiative and your overall strategy with clearly defined goals.
2. Express your creativity – Because TikTok is young, it could make marketers feel like managing what is being published too creatively. Trust the developers, who are real to their world and are raised on the web. Do not eliminate their creative spark and encourage influencers to contribute — it also takes a long time to develop a relationship with influencers.

3. Measure the results – Of course, but it is pointless to run a campaign without understanding how to evaluate its success. Know the specific requirements for a strong performance to continuously check and refine the marketing strategy of your TikTok influencer. If you