

Apart from the traditional forms of social media, the definition of which was given to us by the very first social media platforms like Facebook, Twitter, and Instagram, there are other kinds that are emerging fast enough. Among these mushrooming platforms are SnapChat, TikTok, etc. In this article we will explore the nuances of the application called TikTok.

Originally known as Musical.ly, this app had acquired a serious group of users. They provided a stage for everyone with an interest in creative arts like dance and music and theatres. The best aspect of the app was how it not only endorsed the talented people, but also took notice of the ones who did not have as much talent but had plenty of passion. Musical.ly worked to enhance their audience and boosted their confidence in the process. In November 2017, this application was bought by one of the leading companies in this field- ByteDance. They merged together and the coalition began to be known as TikTok. ByteDance bought Musical.ly for 800 million dollars, a piece of information that is enough to tell us the kind of market the latter had especially in India.

The kind of audience you can expect on TikTok

While the previous counterfeit of TikTok attracted people with a knack for the creative arts, this newer version attracted people who simply wanted to express themselves. TikTok did its marketing right and acquired one billion users, a number that is enough to place it among the giants of the social media world.

TikTok is all about sharing videos of all forms. They could be anything from lip-syncing to dancing to enacting your original punchlines. The motto remains the same- to express. Many people who use this application did not really find ways to express themselves on other platforms. At some places, their form of self-expression was not welcomed. As a result, they could seldom be themselves with people, hence losing their voices. The presence of an app that gives them a secure place to simply be who they are, turned out to be refreshing for them. Everything was welcome here and without a judgemental frown.

However, there are people who use TikTok merely as a form of an extra pastime. They enjoy watching the hilarious videos that people make and add to the pile once in a while.

Prerequisites to get started on TikTok

Given the numerous crimes that originates from social media platforms, it is only viable for some prerequisites, rather rules, to exist. These are mostly to ensure the users fall into an unwarranted situation. TikTok is a company
