

People start ignoring your videos if you are posting way too much. The ones who truly care for you will be the ones looking at each post.

So, what is the real solution? Post a video or two in a day only when your viewers are online.

Respond to your followers

Without second thoughts, reply to all of your followers diligently. Even when someone is texting you and has an opposing opinion, you can deal with them maturely and text them politely. But you have to reply to them all.

If you ignore them, your followers might get the impression that you don't value them enough and will eventually unfollow you. Replying to them can make the backbone of your profile stronger and build your army on Tik Tok.

Add some soul

If you do it for money, it's not good enough. However, if you put in your passion, soul, heart and love in your posts, it is going to turn out better than the best. Who wants to read a book that has no emotion? No one, right? It's the same with your videos.

If you add a message or learning in your content, it is going to leave a better impact on your audience, rather than just posting random valueless videos just to promote your brand.

Share News

Your audience probably knows that you are earning money through promotions. Most of them feel that by the end of the day, you are the one getting all