

Web browsers are nothing but lines of code that enable you to use the internet. Needless to say, these have revolutionised the way we work on the internet.

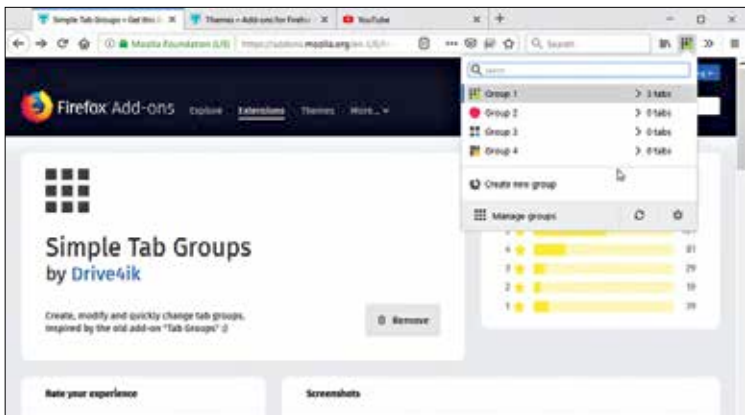

While there are plenty of such web browsers present, we shall talk about one of the more popular and functional ones – Firefox. Designed by Mozilla, Firefox is one of the most commonly used web browsers in the world, and there are plenty of reasons why.

Common features

Much like Firefox, there are numerous other web browsers that are available in the market. Almost all of them have some essential features which are common to all the browsers. These are mostly the necessary things that are expected from a browser. Firefox, too, hosts these features and they are as follows.

1. Tabbed browsing:

Now this is one of the most common features of the browsers available today. In fact, it is quite hard to imagine a browser that does not have this option. However, if you are wondering what exactly we mean by tabbed browsing, here is a brief. When you open your browser to access the internet, be that on your computer or on your phone, you actually open a tab on that browser. Say, for example, you want to play some music on YouTube but you also want to look up something on Google.
