Things to remember for creating an engaging online class:

Here are some important tips for making an online class successful.

A fast internet connection is mandatory

This is the first and foremost thing for anyone who wants to conduct or attend an online class. If the internet is not fast enough, there will be connection issues that will lead to information loss. So, for teachers, the class managers need to check this in advance. The students, as well as teachers, need to adjust their cameras properly. The ideal position on the screen is to ensure a triangular-shaped space between the head and shoulders.

Once this is done, teachers need to make themselves well versed with various online tools in order to use the best teaching techniques and get used to the online teaching method.

Group effort is important

Teachers teaching various subjects online will initially have to focus on how to do it successfully. Their preparedness is crucial to have a proper interaction with students in grasping the concepts easily. It is because not all the students come from the same academic level, so everyone learns differently. Hence, a suitable warm-up at the initial phase is necessary to keep up their interest. A better idea to deal with diverse students in the class is to group similar ones together so that accordingly different teaching styles can be adopted for each group. Teachers can quickly hold the attention of their students in the initial 6 minutes of the class by calling their names and using various teaching tools to trigger their participation.

To support teachers in online classes, educational institutions can make it easy for them by initially offering them lighter loads besides better compensation. A few training sessions on how to successfully conduct an online class can be quite helpful for the teachers so that they learn to concentrate on 'active learning'. This will prevent the teachers from delivering long lectures to fill up the time in a generic class meeting.
