

The ‘IT Guy’ training manual

Thanks to the current pandemic situation, a lot of us have been put into rather uncomfortable situations wherein you no longer have people around whom you could turn to. And when we say people, it’s really the IT guy that we’re talking about. Something’s wrong with your laptop? You’re the IT guy. Gotta figure out how to retrieve something from the server? You’re the IT guy. Can’t figure out why your PC isn’t booting? You’re still the IT guy.

You’d think that it would be much easier to just call the office IT guy or your tech-savvy buddy and get the problem sorted. Unfortunately, the most important part of resolving a problem lies with explaining what the problem really is about. When you can simply hand over your device to the IT dept, they can hunt down the problem and begin the troubleshooting process themselves. However, when you have to explain the problem over a phone call, you need to be as descriptive as possible. And when you yourself do not know what the problem is about, there’s little that can be done. Enter Google, the lord and saviour of all IT problems. Truth be told, most IT guys also have to Google for solutions to IT problems.

We’re planning on changing that. With this FastTrack or as we’re calling it, a “How to Guide”, we plan on empowering you to fix simple technology problems without ringing up the poor IT guy. In this book, you’ll find seven of the most common problems that folks are facing these days and we threw in an additional guide on holding online classes. Apparently, a lot of you’ve written to us explicitly requesting that one. These tasks include