

Need for a good teaching environment

Educators should make sure that they have a decent, tidy classroom, with bright and soft light. They can make use of tools such as the EDB board which is an easy tool for teaching. This tool makes it easy for the users to save memos as well as import them through the board. While using it, teachers should be ready with the teaching materials on the EDB board, so that they can import it as and when needed while conducting the online class. Besides this, the tool has drawing utilities that can be used for incorporating fun class games to keep the students motivated and encourage participation.

Ensure better student engagement

Since the students are not physically present in a class during a virtual class, it is important to create a session consisting of some discussions, audio and video clips, exercises comprising text as well as short audiovisual clips. All this will keep the students actively engaged in the session, thus creating an active learning environment similar to face to face classroom sessions.

Breaking long lectures into chunks

Long lectures are boring in the face to face class as well as in the online class. This reduces the engagement of students so it should be broken into small parts of 10-15 minutes so that students can grasp well and take note of the important points. This can be made more interesting by using the right pictures, texts, and colours so that the student's focus remains glued during the class.

Small group size ensures better participation of students

When larger groups are formed, some students may feel shy to engage with a lot of classmates. Still, if it is smaller, such as 20-30 students in one online class, it can be further broken into a group of 10 so that they can actively take part in group activities, collaborations as well as discussions. Besides this, smaller groups ensure better coordination of time in an online class. Teachers can assign them study materials using a digital whiteboard.

The social presence of teachers, as well as students

Lecturers should not just engage themselves with students by promptly responding to their questions in an online class, but also their social presence needs emphasis. For example, they can post their bios, virtual birthday, or cocktail parties as well as encourage students to do so in the online class.
