

Load Testing of a website

Learn all about load testing, a subset of performance testing

There was a time when it was not difficult for developers to develop a website or web application for users because all the work used to be done with HTML web language. However, it could only make static websites. Previously, the trend was to create a simple website that offered direct information about the company, business, product, services with average performance.

Yet, times have changed and so has the technology. The dynamic website genre has become a massive trend among internet users nowadays. Both small business owners and corporate enterprises have built sophisticated online platforms to attract more users to their products and services.
