

colleagues in another country may just be getting their first cup of coffee for the day. The small window may well be the most productive time of your day, and you do not want to miss that for the moon.

It is also possible that you may just want to appear smart, and quickly answer when the boss asks you if Monday, 9:00 am IST works for you for the next catch-up. Microsoft Outlook now provides an option so you can display three time zones in your calendar.

All you have to do is go to File > Options > Calendar and then choose up to three time zones that you want to show in your calendar.

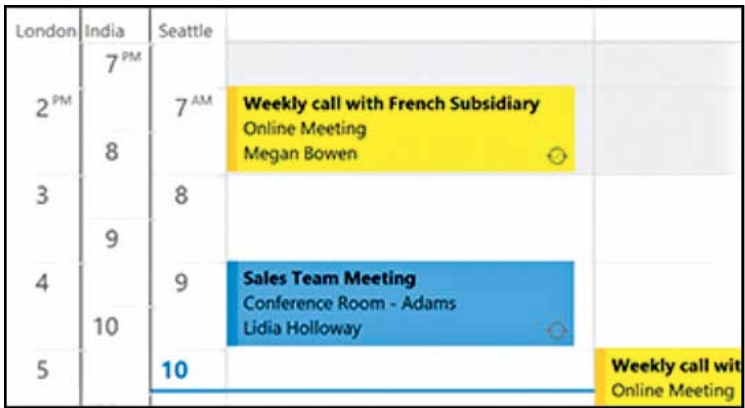

Image source: <https://support.microsoft.com>

With the older options of Outlook, you could see only two time zones. Now you can see up to three time zones displayed on your calendar, as shown in the above image.

Read aloud

It is a twenty-minute drive to your office. You meet your boss everyday in a scrum meeting first thing in the morning, and want to make a great impression by giving information off the top of your head. Every reason to be informed all the time!

Probably work is a side thing that you do, but cooking is your first love. In any of these situations, you won't mind having Microsoft Outlook talk to you, while you are busy with your other tasks. The Read Aloud feature in Microsoft Outlook reads your emails aloud to you. You can choose a voice that you like, increase or decrease the speed, pause/play, and then have Outlook resume from where you left.