

members work on Microsoft Teams or SharePoint from different countries. It is not a surprise, but rather a new normal. If you ever need to translate any conversation, then you can rely on the built-in features of Microsoft Teams.

Meeting whiteboards

While conducting any meeting in Microsoft Teams, participants are provided with a dedicated whiteboard where more than one person can sketch together. There is a difference between sharing screen and whiteboard sketching. When a screen is shared participants can only watch what you show. On the other hand, on whiteboard, you will have the opportunity for real collaboration. It permits all the attendees to sketch and actively participate in the meeting. The Microsoft Whiteboard lets you collaborate with meeting participants in the Whiteboard app and Teams app. Here everyone can see the content in real-time, and it allows drawing, erasing, and sharing content. To access the Whiteboard, you can select the Whiteboard tab before or after the meeting.

Notifying when available

Microsoft Teams incorporate the “notify when available” feature of Skype for business. When a particular user is available in Microsoft Teams, it will send you a notification. You can use this feature at will, instead of repeatedly pinging your contacts.

Blurred background

If you use Microsoft Teams to work with a geographically distributed team, then it will render several benefits. Suppose you do not want to display private stuff and sensitive information to co-workers and attendees. Under the given circumstances, you can use the blur my background option. It will hide non-relevant information during the course of the meeting.
