

to be careful because you are playing for an audience. It also depends on what kind of goal you have developed with your video streaming. Do you do it only for fun and audience reactions? Do you want to create a community that you can play with? Do you want to have a profit through advertisements and partnerships? Is video game streaming a full-time job for you?

The stakes are higher for those who consider streaming as a job or a source of secondary income. They have to be more discerning about their audience and make sure their audience likes them. They have to maintain a consistent viewership and a fair amount of donation. You have to be a regular gamer and use your resources to amplify your gaming and streaming level.

Copyright- bencinstudios.com

Gaming Trends

You have to be aware of gaming trends or what kind of niche attracts a specific audience type. You may also want to focus on breakthrough trends which would create a new streaming wave. Video game streaming has become a creative practice, and there are many factors that affect the market. You can choose to be a pathfinder or just follow what you see has been working for others.

What's your gaming purpose?

There are many ways that your gaming community is broken down in a niche. Most popular streamers go for more accessible gaming. PC games are often most accessible and therefore, attract the most audience. You may want to play big games launched by giant publishers but some years can be wrong. Big budget publishers do take time to develop their next fantastic match. Meanwhile, various indie games also do well on some platforms. It can be an exciting niche to follow, but one has to be careful that the audience is happy.

Some of the most-watched games are battle royale genres that involve exploration, adventures and fighting. Many such games are developed each year, so picking the right game matters a lot. It is more enjoyable if your game has a good plot with complex characters. With a better narrative, the