

Purchasing your Next Game

Once you have understood which game to stream next, you would need to purchase the game at the right price. If you have the right sponsor, it can be a dream come true. Other times, you might have to do some more hunting. It is ideal for getting your hands on the game before your audience gets it so that your content is viewed with anticipation and suspense. Video streams before the games are released will always see higher viewership. They would always look forward to your next video, and this can massively increase your subscribers.

Day-one copies of games are also more expensive. You might have to check various publishers and find a go-to store where you get your games at the right price. You can use promo or demo versions provided for certain consoles or devices which are usually released a few days ahead of the main game launch. You can also look for the availability of the game in different countries. Different publishers have different releasing dates in other countries, and the prices can vary.

If all this doesn't work, you have to mark your dates to get the game right on the first launch date. You may have to work hard to ensure that your stream lines up with the launch date to capitalise on the hype. The next best thing can be any game that wins your audience. Understanding your

Chris Covent game streamer