

All other streaming websites such as Hitbox, Bigo Live, Afreeca that are up and coming platforms have similar terms and services which allow users to live stream their game plays without any copyrighted material.

Conclusion

Most of the popular streaming platforms operate from the US and have terms and services stated on their website based on US laws. But, the copyright laws vary depending on the country where the streamers reside. Thus, the content creators need to be aware of their country's laws on copyright issues, creative content, live streaming etc. However, the general laws are similar to those stated in this article.

Content creators need to have the freedom to post their content, but it is equally important to follow the rules. The live streaming platforms in this article, such as Twitch, YouTube, Facebook, Smashcast, GosuGamers etc., are ensuring the rights of the content creators are protected, including the video game live streamers. But, at the same time, they also need to protect the rights of music, video and other such original content creators, who can be easily violated. It is important to reach an understanding such that none of the creators face any losses.
