

5. Genshin Impact

With its stunning game design that has people asking how they could possibly be able to get such a high quality game for free, this action role-playing game is turning heads. Genshin Impact has an immense open world atmosphere of fantasy and a fantastic war and tale to boot. With plenty of people tuning in to Twitch to see what all the fuss is about, news about this title has spread fast.

Genshin Impact

If it's too good to be true, as the saying goes, it probably is. In order for players to acquire new weapons, characters and other tools, Genshin Impact employs a gacha game monetisation scheme. Game developers do somehow have to make their money, though. They gave us, at least, a fantastic title to try and share with our friends.

6. League of Legends

League of Legends is an online multiplayer battle arena video game that in 2009 took the world by storm and has not dropped in popularity. Created by Riot Games, it is considered by many to be the greatest export in the world. The audience for this title is massive, as the League World Championship reached a peak audience of 3.8 million people this year.

For several years, the League has been ranking high and is almost always in the top 10 for Twitch streams, regardless of the time or day. No wonder that the League is the obvious choice for players who want to draw a broad and loyal audience with its sophisticated lore, exclusive champions and
