

screens, the aim is to differentiate the background from the foreground so that editing it later becomes simple.

What's a green screen?

A green screen is simply a background behind you or the subject that is being shot. You can remove the green screen and replace it with whatever you want during the video editing process – an image, a video, a game, or even a colour.

It can even be made from almost anything such as boards, paper, cardboard or any flat surface – you can also buy some green paint and colour the wall behind you. If you have a big screen TV then put a green wallpaper on it and you could even use that as a background.
